Forecast for Thursday 11 Mar 2021

Weather: Outbreaks of rain, snow on the munro tops, will continue overnight, these will be heavy and persistent at times but will begin to ease before dawn. During the morning there will be a few bright spells particularly for more easterly ranges but frequent blustery showers will turn increasingly more wintery to lower levels. By lunchtime any showers above 400m will be of snow. A few centimetres of snow can be expected to accumulate and more for the munro tops especially in the west. Accompanied by strong winds blizzards will be a hazard at times.

Chance of cloud free mountain/hill tops above 800m: 30% or less, extensive low cloud associated with snow showers, perhaps more chance in the east where showers will be less frequent.

Visibility: Generally moderate or poor visibility but becoming very poor over western ranges at times in heavier snow showers or blizzards when whiteout conditions may take place. Cloud bases will generally be overcast in the west from 400m upwards, in the east there will be some cloud breaks but bases will generally be broken above 600m. Perhaps some brightness around Moray hill tops which will be more sheltered in these conditions.
